Headlines: There's no place like home, which probably explains why one pup decided to escape doggy daycare while his parents were on vacation. Jeremy and Sarah Hensen dropped their pooch, Dexter, off at doggy day care before heading to Las Vegas for five days, only to get ring notification three days later of their pup whining to be let in at the front door. Dexter apparently had to scale a six foot fence and trek two miles to get back home. "He was bound and determined. Obviously, he didn't understand the fact that we were gone, he just thought that we were home. And he takes his job protecting us very seriously," Jeremy told Inside Edition.

Throngs of tourists gleefully watched the legendary Old Faithful geyser shoot towering bursts of steaming water while others got stuck in "bison jams" on picturesque valley roads as visitors returned Wednesday for the partial reopening of Yellowstone National Park after destructive floods. Park managers raised the gates at three of Yellowstone's five entrances for the first time since June 13, when 10,000 visitors were ordered out after rivers across northern Wyoming and southern Montana surged over their banks following a torrent of rainfall that accelerated the spring snowmelt. The cost and scope of the damage is still being assessed, Yellowstone Superintendent Cam Sholly said Wednesday.

Wyoming has the money to feed school children in need of lunches, so the state need not comply with a federal mandate espousing gender ideology, the Wyoming Department of Education announced Wednesday. "Treasurer Curt Meier and a host of Wyoming's state leaders have assured me that Wyoming has the money to cover these lunches," said Superintendent of Public Instruction Brian Schroeder. "We can cut ties with these federal lunch dollars and still provide for Wyoming kids – it only requires two things: the will of the Wyoming people, and the determination of Wyoming's governing leaders. If we don't fight this, we enable it." But Wyoming Gov. Mark Gordon's office is urging caution, saying the federal mandate could impact a lot more than school lunches. The U.S. Department of Agriculture on May 5 announced it was linking its school lunch funding, including $40 million to Wyoming, to a requirement that all funded schools update their non-discrimination policies to include protections for sexual orientation and gender identity.

A letter from President Joe Biden to oil and gas company executives blaming them for high energy prices was more hypocritical than helpful, an industry spokesman told Cowboy State Daily Tuesday. Ryan McConnaughey, vice president and director of communications for the Petroleum Association of Wyoming, said Biden's letter makes improper assumptions about how oil and gas prices are determined. In a June 14 letter to ExxonMobil, Marathon Petroleum Corp., Valero Energy Corp, Phillips 66, Shell, BP and Chevron, Biden wrote that Vladimir Putin "is principally responsible for the intense financial pain the American people and their families are bearing." However, he also claimed oil refining companies have dragged their feet on increasing fuel supplies they cut during the COVID pandemic when there was less demand.
